Massachusetts General Hospital: Human Trafficking Initiative	The Division has built on its research by developing an evidence-based training on human trafficking for healthcare workers. The HTI training targets a wide healthcare audience, with the goal of reaching physicians, residents, nurses, social workers, mental healthcare providers, administrators, and other health professionals. The aim of the training is to heighten healthcare workers' awareness of human trafficking, thus improving victim identification efforts and creating an environment of safe and appropriate care. Additionally, the trainings will help healthcare workers understand how they can play a role in the prevention of human trafficking in their communities. The Division is also busy disseminating its case study research findings through academic peer-reviewed publications and by reaching out to public health professionals, policy makers, and other colleagues.
